Jinger Zeng, project engineer for Team Las Vegas, US DOE Solar Decathlon 2013, (pictured left) and Alexia Chen, project manager, will update the chapter on the progress of the first local entry into this National competition.

UNLV is one of the 20 teams chosen by the U.S. Department of Energy to compete in this international competition. UNLV’s entry DesertSol is designed as an ultra-efficient house that celebrates Mojave sustainable living using solar as the fuel source.

When finished this October the team will take the home to the US DOE competition in Irvine, CA. After the competition the home will return to Las Vegas and have a permanent location within the Springs Preserve. The home will be converted into a sustainability classroom for the public to use.

The success of this project would not be possible without the support of the community plus local professionals including people like Carl Solomon, Bernie Lange, Tom Jones, etc.

The lunch is $20.00, non-members, company employees, guests are always invited. Please RSVP to Bill Laub by Tuesday, May 21, 2013.
